

Good360 Security & Compliance

Proper use of donated goods:

- Your organization may use donated goods only as direct charitable donations to people in need.
- Your organization must not sell, trade, barter, or otherwise transfer any donated goods in exchange for money, property, or services. Prohibited transfers include listing the donated goods for sale or trade on websites, in stores, at flea markets, or in any similar manner.
- Your organization must not use donated goods for raffles, auctions, or any fundraising activity.
- Your organization must not accept anything of value (including voluntary donations) in exchange for the donated goods.
- Your organization must not give any donated goods to its volunteers, officers, directors, employees, or contractors for personal use.
- Your organization must not return any donated goods to the manufacturer or to any retail store.
- Your organization must not give donations to another nonprofit organization or other entity.
- Your organization must not redistribute any donated goods to any location outside of the United States (unless Good360 has given written permission in advance).

If a nonprofit violates any of these restrictions, Good360 may terminate their membership immediately. Good360 reserves the right at any time to rescind or modify its Master Donation Acceptance Agreement and/or restrictions on the use/storage of donations.

Additional information can be found in our Resource Center.

See Something, Say Something, Do Something

If you see a nonprofit that is potentially misusing Good360 donations or violating any of these restrictions, let us know.

The nonprofit may not realize they're breaking the rules.

OR

They may be willfully violating Good360's terms and conditions.

Misuse of donations hurts Good360 and all the nonprofits that benefit through generous corporate donors.
